Designed to captivate the attention of the visitors, Interior is a physical interpretation of the brand which our client wanted to achieve. The salon is located in city's prime neighborhood; Hair Saint was designed in response to a brief from the owner for a "salon unlike all others".

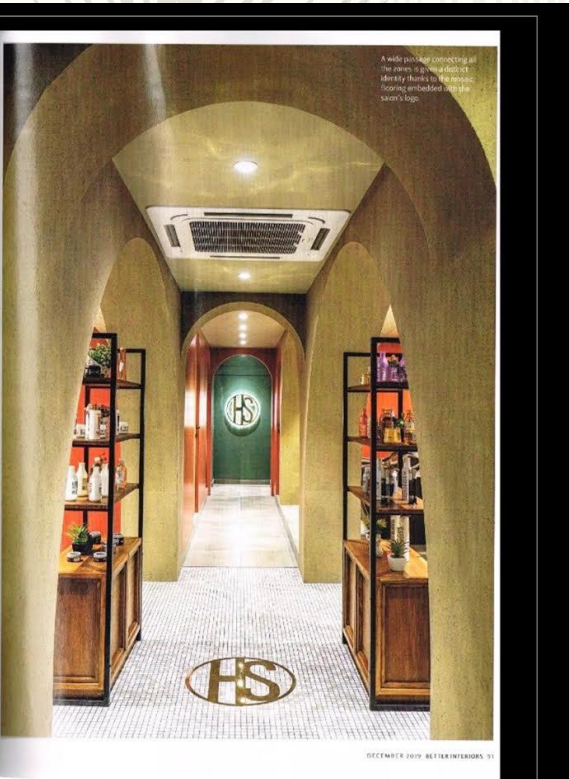

While searching for the right concept for them we were inspired by the Corinthian order. This style is characterized by slender fluted columns and elaborates capitals decorated with acanthus leaves and scrolls which incorporate both feminine as well as masculine aspect of the design.

A wide passage connecting all the areas is a subtle element that links to the existing flooring embedded into the new design.

Moving away from the blue tones, the designers chose to infuse life into the spa area with customer's wallpaper. This transition between design themes allows customers to experience the salon in a fresh way with each service. Both the podium room and the hair stations have walls adorned in wood paneling at the base and wallpaper on top. "These two contrasting mediums are separated by rose gold brass lines," point out the architects. "It's a subtle addition but it lends a distinctive radiance to the wall. Within the compact spa room, the resting bed, basin and storage fill up the volume without crowding the space. The wallpaper attracts attention upwards in the room, while the reflective rose gold brass lines covering the basin in the corner helps in planting an eye as well as creates an illusion of space.

Both Deving and Pratik admit that subdividing the floor area into these usable zones was a challenge. "We had to provide so many arches into a tight space. Budget and time were big constraints as well," they state adding, "We had to complete and execute the project in two months, which was equally Challenging and exciting too! It was their strategic use of material and space that helped calm the execution cost of the project. For example, using MDF instead of brick for the arches or relying on their strong colour story instead of heavy materials and textures. Each design element has made Hair Saint not only a success in terms of execution but also when it comes to customer experience. For the client and those who visit the space, it indeed is a "value unlike any other." Kudos to P&D associates for a mission well accomplished!
